HISTORY:

A 4-year-old child presented with a history of Kangri burns on both thighs and perineum 7days back. Kangri is a fire pot used for warmth in the Kashmir valley of India. It is a portable earthen pot containing burning charcoal; earthen pot contained in a wicker basket.

After one week, the child was managed with dressings at the primary level and was referred to our speciality. On examination, raw areas were present on both thighs. There was a loss of prepuce over the glans. Glans was looking relatively healthy. The whole of the prepuce had detached from just above the corona with a minimal attachment (just a few mm) on the left side.
